

“THIS NATION CAN AFFORD TAX RELIEF AND WE CAN’T AFFORD NOT TO HAVE IT.”

– President George W. Bush,
5/22/01

On September 7th, President Bush asked Congress for an additional $87 billion for the war in Iraq, raising the total amount spent to date on the war to roughly $150 billion. At the same time, the Administration is pressing ahead with implementation of its tax cuts, while the nation is now running a $525 billion deficit. Here are some comparisons showing how the war, the tax cuts, and the deficit relate:

- ✓ If the dividend/capital gains and 2001 tax cuts for the richest 1% were repealed, the nation would save $590 billion. That is enough to fund the $105 billion cost of occupying Iraq for five years, pay for the proposed $400 billion Medicare prescription drug plan, and pay down about $85 billion of the deficit. Source: [CSBA]
- ✓ If only the 2001 tax cuts for the richest 1% were frozen today, the nation would save roughly $442 billion – or more than 5 times the $87 billion President Bush will request for Iraq. Source: [CTJ].
- ✓ The $442 billion that would be saved by freezing the 2001 Bush tax cuts for the richest 1% is more than 4 times the estimated cost of occupying Iraq for 5 years. According to a February report by the nonpartisan Center for Strategic and Budgetary Assessments, the five-year cost of occupying Iraq is about $105 billion Source: [CSBA]
- ✓ If only the dividend and capital gains tax cuts were repealed, the nation would save roughly $148 billion – more than double the $87 billion in President Bush’s new spending request for Iraq, and roughly equal to the total amount that will have been spent on Iraq this year. Source: [Tax Policy Center]
- ✓ The Bush Administration’s new $87 billion request for Iraq is more than the total tax cuts the bottom 60% of America has received from the 2001 tax cut. Source: [CTJ]
- ✓ The $150 billion that will have been spent on Iraq is more than triple the total tax
